A photograph of a bedroom interior. In the foreground, a bed is covered with white linens, including a folded blanket and a pillow. The bed is positioned in front of a large, vertical wall panel with a white background and a grey, abstract, marbled pattern. To the left of the wall panel, a window with a white frame shows a view of green foliage. To the right, a portion of a white lamp is visible. The number '902' is overlaid in the center of the image.

The image shows a vertical rectangular sample of crystalline alabaster. The surface is covered in a complex, organic marbled pattern. The base color is a light, off-white or pale grey, which is intricately veined and mottled with darker shades of grey and charcoal. The patterns are irregular and resemble natural stone or biological tissue. The overall appearance is that of a high-quality, natural material.

The image shows a close-up of a crystalline alabaster surface. The texture is highly irregular and porous, with a complex, organic pattern of light beige and cream-colored tones. The surface appears to be composed of many small, interconnected crystalline structures, giving it a rough, almost fibrous appearance. The lighting is even, highlighting the subtle variations in color and the intricate details of the material's structure.

The image shows a close-up of a brown, marbled surface with a complex, vein-like pattern. The color is a warm, earthy brown, ranging from light tan to dark chocolate. The texture appears slightly rough and uneven, characteristic of natural stone or a high-quality paper finish. The pattern consists of irregular, branching veins that create a sense of depth and movement across the surface.
